Discover the Wines of the Loire Valley

Not to disparage any of France's household name wine regions, but none of them offer the diversity you'll find in the wines of the Loire Valley. The French aristocracy was onto something when they built their impressive chateaux in this region that's often called "the garden of France." It's a sweet spot for viticulture too, so the wonder is that the wine jewels are not better known to consumers outside of France. After your week of oenotourism at the Chateau de la Caillotièrre, you'll have an insiders' knowledge and understand the acclaim these wines have received from celebrated international wine critics and connoisseurs. You'll also appreciate them for the value they represent. Here's a preview of a few of the treasures within easy reach of Chateau de la Caillotièrre:

Savennières: Think white wines don't age as well as reds? They can if they're from this little area just 30 minutes from Chateau de la Caillotièrre. Here's what Karen MacNeil says about these wines in The Wine Bible: "The middle Loire's most extraordinary dry white wine, Savennières, is possibly the greatest dry Chenin Blanc in the world...densely flavored wines, with such intensity, grip, minerality, and taut acidity that they can be aged for decades...But sheer hedonistic flavors are operating here, too...a whirlwind of quince, chamomile, honey and cream, all pierced by a lightning bolt of citrus." We'll be tasting these wines at Chateau de Vaults with our hostess, the Vicomtesse Evelyne de Pontbriand and/or at the Domaine aux Moines run by Monique and Tessa Laroche, a famous "mother-daughter" partnership.

La Coulée de Serrant: Exclusively owned by the Joly family, the Coulée de Serrant vineyard is a controlled appellation of only 7 hectares. The vineyard was planted in 1130 by Cistercian monks and today consists of vines aged from 35 to 80 years old. The old small monastery, a listed building, still exists. Always considered as a rare and unique product, the Serrant Casting was celebrated as one of the best French white wines by King Louis XI, who called it "the gold drop" and the Sun King, Louis XIV. The vineyard is cultivated partly by hand and partly by horse because of the steep slopes overlooking the Loire. Since 1984, the entire estate has been cultivated using biodynamic farming methods. Three wines are produced in small quantities on the property and benefit from the principles of biodynamic agriculture: "Coulée de Serrant", "Clos de la Bergerie" and "Les Vieux Clos".

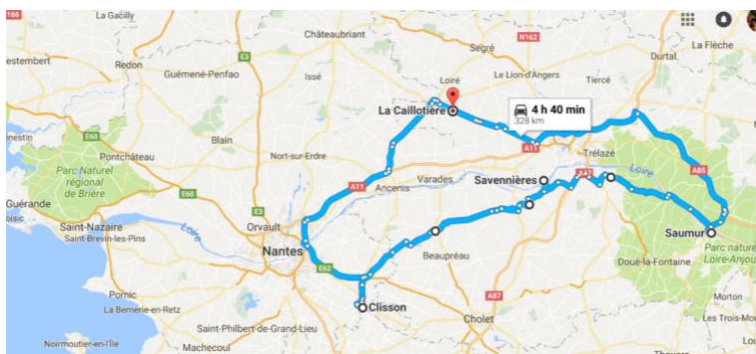

Coteaux du Layon: Of course you've heard of Chateau d'Yquem, the Bordeaux sweet wine that is one of the most expensive wines in the world. Well, the wines of Coteaux du Layon can give Yquem some stiff competition in every way except price. These are wines that require a very special combination of conditions – misty morning fogs followed by afternoon sun – to encourage the formation of botrytis cinerea, known as “noble rot”. Noble rot concentrates the sugars and flavors in the grapes, resulting in wines (to quote Karen MacNeil again) “of soaring elegance, lightness, sheerness, and purity of fruit”. Either Chateau du Breuil or Domaine de Juchepie will be our destination for tasting the wines from this region, only 45 minutes from Chateau de la Caillotiére. Both of these estates are recommended in Robert Parker’s The Wine Advocate.

Saumur: This fascinating place has so much to offer, it’s a pity that there are so few hours in a day. It’s famous for the caves carved out of the limestone hills to provide the stone for the Loire Valley chateaux. Known as troglodyte caves because many of these caves are actually inhabited to this day, they also provide the perfect environment for aging sparkling wines. Bubblicies here are called Crémant de Loire, or Crémant de Saumur, but only because the vineyards are not within the Champagne appellation.

These wines have the tiny, elegant bubbles that result from “methode champenoise” fermentation and the complexity that comes from extended aging on the yeast lees. The only thing they don’t have is the Champagne price tag.

Saumur is also known for its red wines, particularly Saumur Champigny. These wines are made from Cabernet Franc, the grape variety that made Bordeaux’ Chateau Ausone and Cheval Blanc famous. We’ll visit the Langlois Chateau, with its spectacular chais, and the beautiful Domaine de Nerleux.

Pays Nantais and Muscadet wines: It isn’t a grape. It isn’t a place. Muscadet is the name of a white wine made in the western most region of the Loire Valley, the Pays Nantais. Pays Nantais takes its name from the city of Nantes. Muscadet is made from the grape, Melon de Bourgogne, which hints at the variety’s interesting journey from its origins in Burgundy to the Lower Loire. After a devastating frost in 1709 destroyed the vineyards of the western Loire, Burgundian monks brought this hardy, frost-resistant variety to the region. In so doing, they saved both the viticulture of the Lower Loire and the variety itself from disappearing entirely – a fortunate outcome for food and wine lovers. Muscadet is almost universally considered one of the best wine pairings for seafood....and with the Atlantic Ocean only a stone's throw away, the delectable seafood of the "Pays Nantais" is renowned for its freshness and variety. Foodies, this one's for you!

Our destination, an hour from Chateau de la Caillotiére, will be Château de Cassemichère, the birth place of the Muscadet and the "almost Italian" Château de l'Oiselinière, with a visit to the historic village of Clisson.

Last, but not least, the city of Angers, is the birth place and only manufacturing site for the world-famous orange-flavoured liqueur Cointreau. A visit to the distillery followed by a degustation workshop is a must...
